Delray Beach International Tennis Championships Children from First Serve volunteer at Delray Beach International Tennis Championships

Thursday, February 02, 2006 -- Children from First Serve, a global non-profit network consisting of professional tennis players, tournaments, community partners, local youth tennis and education non-profits, and the major governing and organizational bodies of tennis that helps inner-city young people develop internal assets they need to succeed in life, pose with Jeff Salzenstein at the Delray Beach International Tennis Championships. Salzenstein is among the roster of professional tennis players participating in the annual event.

The international headquarters of First Serve is based in south Florida and in 2005, 20 local First Serve Chapters throughout the United States provided over one million free 'kid hours' to inner-city youth.

At the Delray Beach ITC, children will learn first-hand what it takes to put on a professional tennis tournament by participating in a number of activities, including registering players and cutting racquet stings, throughout the week-long tournament.
